- deterring the offender or other persons from committing the same or a similar offence:

Form 12G
Notice of consequences of first warning
Section 86N(1), Sentencing Act 2002

Case No:

Note: In this notice, a qualifying offence means an offence against a provision of the Crimes Act 1961 listed in Schedule 1AB of the Sentencing Act 2002 (a list of these offences is attached).

To [full name, address, and occupation of offender]

1 On [date], you were sentenced for the following qualifying offence(s): [list offences].

2 For this paragraph select the statement that applies.

Statement A

You have been sentenced to imprisonment for a term of [specify period of sentence for relevant qualifying offence(s)].

Statement B

You have been sentenced to imprisonment for a term of [specify period of sentence for relevant qualifying offence(s)], cumulative on [specify cumulative sentences] for those offences.

Statement C

You have been sentenced to [specify indeterminate sentence for relevant qualifying offence(s)].

3 On [date], I gave you a first warning, in which I warned you of the possible consequences if you subsequently receive a qualifying sentence for any qualifying offence committed after that first warning.

4 This notice records in writing the possible consequences that I explained to you.

5 A record of the first warning will now appear in the permanent court record and in your criminal record.

What are the possible consequences of the first warning?

What happens if you commit another qualifying offence (other than murder)?

If you are sentenced for another qualifying offence (other than murder) committed after you received the first warning and the Judge sentences you to imprisonment for more than 24 months,—

- (a) you will have to serve that sentence without parole (unless it is a sentence of life imprisonment or preventive detention); and
- (b) you will be given another warning, called a subsequent warning.

The Judge may decide that it would be manifestly unjust for you to be ineligible for parole. If the Judge decides that you should be eligible for parole, they may still impose a minimum period of imprisonment.

What happens if you commit murder?

If you are sentenced for murder committed after you received the first warning,—

- (a) when you are sentenced, the Judge must sentence you to imprisonment for life with a longer minimum period of imprisonment than would otherwise apply; and
- (b) you will be given another warning, called a subsequent warning.

The Judge will determine the longer minimum period of imprisonment by taking into account whether you pleaded guilty to the offence and other relevant circumstances.

The Judge may decide that either life imprisonment or the longer minimum period of imprisonment would be manifestly unjust and impose a different sentence or minimum period of imprisonment. Alternatively, the Judge may order that you serve the sentence of imprisonment for life without parole.

3 You had a record of a first warning at the time you committed the offence(s).

4 On [date], I gave you a subsequent warning, in which I warned you of the possible consequences if you receive a further qualifying sentence for any qualifying offence committed after that subsequent warning.

5 This notice records in writing the possible consequences that I explained to you.

6 A record of the subsequent warning will now appear in the permanent court record and in your criminal record.

What are the possible consequences of this subsequent warning?

What happens if you commit another qualifying offence (other than murder)?

If you are sentenced for another qualifying offence (other than murder) committed after you received the subsequent warning and the Judge sentences you to imprisonment for more than 24 months,—

- (a) the term of imprisonment will be the maximum term for that offence (unless the offence is manslaughter or you pleaded guilty to the offence, in which case other prescribed minimum terms apply); and
- (b) you must serve the sentence without parole; and

(c) you will be given another subsequent warning.

The Judge may decide that the maximum term of imprisonment or your ineligibility for parole would be manifestly unjust. If the Judge decides that you should be eligible for parole, they may still impose a minimum period of imprisonment.

What happens if you commit murder?

If you are sentenced for murder committed after you received the subsequent warning,—

- (a) when you are sentenced, the Judge must sentence you to imprisonment for life with a longer minimum period of imprisonment than would otherwise apply; and
